INTELLIGENCE PRODUCTION COURSE NO. 10

Chief Instructor's Comments

1. Intelligence Production Course No. 10 (JOT Class of July 1964) had 15 students. The course began on 26 October and ended on 31 December 1964, a total of ten weeks.

2. This class was in many ways a preview of the future eight-week Production courses because the holidays in November and December had the effect of disrupting almost three weeks of the schedule. Despite the cutbacks, particularly on research time, the students showed an ability and willingness to work overtime to accomplish a worthwhile job on the course research projects. Another aid in getting full benefit from the course was the almost complete lack of job worry and hunting in the late stages of the schedule. This group was the first group to demonstrate a higher interest in the course than in future jobs at this stage of their careers.

3. In terms of performance the group was above the average of IPC groups. The over-all grades for the group show one S, four at S-, five at P+, three at P, and two at P-. The interest and willingness to work shown by this group were the major factors in these results.

4. Future IPC's will see much more conflict in schedule with the JOT Techniques Course and our other courses. As a result, our scheduling of instructors and the various segments of the course will have to be more flexible. At times, some phases of the present course may have to be changed or dropped, depending on the availability of instructors and on our ability to fit our schedules into those of the cooperating offices in the DD/I and DD/S&T.

5. The major instructional work in IPC No. 10 was done by members of the Intelligence Production Faculty --
